

SENATE TO ASSIGN COMMITTEEMEN SOME TIME TODAY

Mr. Grundy Now Enrolled As Member and Sits in The Deliberative Body

WILL BE GIVEN A POST

Bristol Man Likely to Be Placed On Manufacturers' Committee

By International News Service
WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—A dozen choice Republican assignments on Senate Committees will be awarded today by the Republican Committee on Committees in the Senate.

While far more important assignments will be given to other Senators, the greatest interest is attached to the appointment that will go to Senator Joseph R. Grundy, now safely enrolled as Pennsylvania's junior Senator. Mr. Grundy in all probability will be placed on the Senate Manufacturers Committee, because of his long experience in the manufacturing industry, and this will be his most important assignment.

Placing Mr. Grundy on the Manufacturers Committee incidentally will bring him under the chairmanship of Senator "Young Bob" LaFollette, an insurgent from Wisconsin, one of those states described by the Pennsylvania as "backward." He may also win a post on the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. Grundy now ranks as the Senate's newest member and consequently will have to yield to every other member in the body on assignments, because of the seniority rule.

The most important post to be awarded by the committee on committees will be the chairmanship of the powerful appropriations committee. This will go to Senator Wesley L. Jones, of Washington, under the seniority rule. He already has entered upon his duties.

The promotion of Jones will create a vacancy in the chairmanship of the Senate Commerce Committee with its control over shipping, radio and waterway legislation. Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, will get his chairmanship, being in turn succeeded by either Senator Gould, of Maine, or Senator Hatfield, of Washington, as chairman of the Senate Immigration Committee.

Christmas Cantata To Be Given by Methodists

The Christmas cantata, "Mischievous Santa," will be presented by the children of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School on Monday evening, December 23, at 7.30 o'clock.

The sacred pageant, "The Star," will be presented on Sunday evening, December 29.

A cordial invitation is extended to the public to be present.

Miss Nellie King and Mrs. Earl Tomb were guests of their aunt, Miss Mary Woodman and Mrs. Harriet Tomb at a tea given at the Woodman residence, Bridgetown, Thursday afternoon.

TRUE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS EXPRESSED IN GIFT GIVING WHEN CORRECT ATTITUDE IS TAKEN; UNFORTUNATE SHOULD BE REMEMBERED

Including today there are only 9 shopping days to Christmas.

The evergreen is synonymous, so it seems, of Christmas time. And so it should be, for it depicts a life that doesn't die; the other trees do not.

The true spirit of Christmas is expressed in our gift giving if we go about it in the right manner. We should give to those who are in need, and those who are dear to us. Many acquaintances whom we cherish we like to remember with gay Christmas cards with thoughtful verses and lines that apply to our love for them. And the supply of cards at Ottman's, referred to as the biggest little store in town, is a splendid one. Ottman's, referred to as the biggest little store in town, is a splendid one. Ottman's is located at 235 Mill street, and there are also to be had tags, seals, tinsel cord and other necessary items for making gift packages look attractive. The supply of children's books at Ottman's will also prove worthwhile, as the selection is varied.

A Priscilla sewing cabinet is what I bought at Factors-to-You Furniture Company store at 225 Mill street. It is so sturdy and is made of mahogany. This roomy cabinet is what Grandma has been wishing out loud for many months and so I know this is one of the gifts that will please the recipient. And I took a few minutes to inspect the little oak desk at the Factors-to-You store. This child's piece of furniture is accompanied by a little chair. The desk is a roll-top one.

While in the vicinity of Pappagian's, Washington street and the highway, I stopped in this sweet shop to order a box of hard candy. Mr. Pappagian carries a variety of kinds in stock, and my wants were quickly supplied. Stangl pottery is attracting the eyes of many passers-by on Mill street when they reach the Dorothy Shop, at Cedar street. One little basket about ten inches high made of a light yellow is very attractive, and was set off with a bouquet of small blooms. The array of ladies' handkerchiefs which may be found there is very pleasing, especially as many are hand-embroidered.

Marty Green at his Army and Navy Store on Mill street, assisted me most ably in one of my purchases. This was a pen-knife which I wanted for Cousin Jim. The one I secured at Green's has two blades, and a durable black handle. Dad needs a new lunch kit so I intend to tell him they are sold at this store, complete with a vacuum bottle.

A lovely set of leather pieces, consisting of wallet, key-container and a card case was on display in the window of Hoffman's Cut Rate Store, and I decided the minute I glimpsed it it was what I should get for Uncle Joe. The leather is in two colors, shading from brown to green. The line of toiletries, such as perfume, powder, toilet water, bath salts, and cosmetics, too, is most complete at Hoffman's.

In fact all the merchants, it appears, are trying their hardest to help all shoppers, for no matter what is desired from an automobile to a pocket-handkerchief, can be found in one of the many places of business.

EAGLE SCOUT

MAHLON DETWEILER

Eagle Scout, and member of Troop No. 11, Parkside, of which Frank Fossbender is Scoutmaster. To secure the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rating of all, years of earnest effort are required in earning a long list of merit badges, representing a great variety of cultural and useful pursuits.

Detweiler and one other scout are the only boys who have attained Eagle Scout ranking in the brief period since the Bucks County Council has been organized. It is anticipated, however, that, with the expansion and intensification of the Scout program which the current campaign for $53,000 will make possible, many other Scouts will rise rapidly to achieve the Eagle Scout rating.

Scout Troop at Hulmeville Gives Demonstration of Work

HULMEVILLE, Dec. 14th.—Demonstration of their various forms of work was participated in by Hulmeville Troop, No. 1, Boy Scouts of America, in the basement of the Methodist Church, here, last evening. The meeting, which was open to the public, was an interesting one, the lads sending flag signals, playing a form of football, with the entire group participating, and conducting their closing exercises in fine manner.

A talk was given to the boys by the Scoutmaster, Frank Forker. Mr. Forker stated the troop had designated last evening as a public meeting night, in order that the parents and friends might see just what the Scouts are accomplishing in line of training. Splendid advice was given to the boys. They were told by the Scoutmaster to take advantage of every opportunity of learning they might have, as in later years they will benefit greatly.

It is expected that all members of the troop with the exception of one of the newer recruits will be first class Scouts by the 7th of February.

HEALTH SKETCH GIVEN BY SCHOOL CHILDREN

Demonstration Before Members of the Bristol Travel Club Yesterday

DR. ASHTON A SPEAKER

One of the instructive numbers on the health day program at the meeting of the Bristol Travel Club in the club home, Cedar street, yesterday afternoon, was an address by Dr. Dorothy Ashton, of Swarthmore.

The talk by the well-known medical woman was preceded by a health sketch participated in by 29 young women students of Bristol High School, and directed by Miss Mary Fine, physical education director for girls at the school.

Dr. Ashton, who was introduced by Mrs. Frank Lehman, president of the club, spoke of physical incapacities and the adjustment of individuals to environments caused by such. She spoke of two specific types, those who are incapacitated from birth and those who lose the use of various senses or portions of the body in later years.

The address covered many phases of medical science, and the gathering was informed of the manner by which through examinations it is possible to ascertain just how well various organs function.

The value of exercises in the fresh air and sunlight was stressed by the speaker, who stated that where outdoor exercise was not possible, probably because of the age and condition of the individuals, massaging and muscular treatments are good substitutes.

"Don't worry about your health. Go see a doctor and let him do the worrying," was the advice offered. In fact, Dr. Ashton warned against worry over anything if it could possibly be guarded against. "Things that have happened should be put aside, if they are the things that are worrying one. And then we should not worry about what others say of us. Just do what is right, stop worrying, and health will not be hampered from that angle."

Immunity was spoken of, the various forms of inoculations and the reactions and benefits of such being told of. "Cases of immunity are not transmitted from parent to child," was one of the woman's remarks.

A number of questions were asked of the one from Swarthmore, her answers showing her splendid knowledge of many problems of the medical world. The questions foremost in the minds of the Travel Club members and their guests of the afternoon were chiefly: Dieting, treatments for ward-

ROAD SUPERVISORS TRIAL COMES TO END; AWAIT VERDICT

Case Has Occupied Considerable Time of Court and Judge Keller

JURY TO GET THE CASE

Court Adjourned Until Monday Morning When The Jury Will Deliberate

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 14.—When engineers following the Revolutionary War laid out the Newtown and Richboro highway, little did they think that a small stretch of that highway, a trifle over one mile, would cause a lot of trouble in court 142 years later. In the good old days the road was a "short cut" to Washington's Crossing and other places, by the way of Newtown for people living in Richboro and points east.

Yesterday the third day of the trial of two road supervisors of Newtown township, charged with maintaining a nuisance in failing to keep this ancient highway, now a main artery of travel, in proper shape for safe and convenient travel, came to an end. Both sides closed and Judge Hiram H. Keller, who has been patiently presiding in the case since it was called last Wednesday, adjourned court until next Monday when the case will go to the jury for final action.

Alexander Chambers and Charles E. Shuster are the two supervisors on trial. Yesterday they told their side of the story after twelve witnesses had been called by the Commonwealth, examined and cross-examined to a greater extent than would a person on trial for murder.

Many amusing incidents have happened during the trial. The wit and humor of the witnesses and counsel amused a good sized audience during the trial. One spectator said the "trial was the best attraction in town this week," speaking of shows. In another instance, a witness was stricken with a heart attack after leaving the witness stand, and died a short time later.

That Newtown township road supervisors closed the 1929 period as of December 1, this year, without a cent of debt and with over $3,000 in the treasury; that the township has but 18 miles of highway to keep in repair; that no effort was made to borrow money for improving the road and that the tax rate is only ten mills, were points brought out and stressed by the Commonwealth yesterday while the defendants were being cross-examined.

Supervisor Alexander Chambers also declared yesterday on the witness stand in answer to Commonwealth counsel's statement that he did not want to spend any money on the Newtown and Richboro road:

"Mr. Ross, you have the wrong man; it has always been one of my hobbies to get that road fixed if the money can be secured."

Charles E. Shuster, one of the defendants, and supervisor since February, this year, testified that about 385 tons of stone have been placed on the road since he has been in office. The witness said that he looks over the road about every two weeks.

"I have never seen or heard of an accident on this road and can drive it in safety at 25 miles an hour," Shuster said.

"I took the job of supervisor of Newtown township to get the people of the upper-end of the township out of the mud, but I have not discriminated against the Newtown-Richboro road."

"It is true that I did say to the late Charles Rockhill one day when he came at me with an ill temper, that I would do just as little on the road to keep out of jail, but I meant that in fun. It was just another way I had of telling him to shut up about the road for he was always after me about it. I want you to know that I live on a mud road myself, not near as good as the Newtown-Richboro road."

"Not once did any witness for the Commonwealth in this case address any complaints to the board of supervisors about this road since I have been on the board."

Supervisor Shuster admitted that he did meet at the office of a Newtown merchant to discuss the road with a committee from the Chamber of Commerce.

"I was never informed of the outcome of the action taken by the Chamber of Commerce Committee," Shuster told the court. "We were ready to meet the business men of Newtown half way, but nothing ever materialized."

"I want to tell you that the work that has been done on the road in question recently is not due to the fact that Supervisor Chambers and me have been arrested. The road has not been dangerous for public travel in the last two years in my opinion. Yes, it is true that we wound up the year 1929 with a balance of $3,413.41 in the treasury."

EVOLUTION OF THE YULE TREE

Not this year, nor next, but eventually the bit old-fashioned Christmas tree fresh cut and carried home from the woods or the curb tree market will pass into the discard. Its decline has been in progress several years.

There is no sentiment involved in this change in custom and tradition. Conservation and reforestation advocates are not unanimously in favor of the annual Christmas-tree slaughter, although some see in the cultivation of conifers for the Christmas market an aid to reforestation, but they are not driving folks to the abandonment of the Yule-tree.

Opposition to the forest-grown Christmas tree originates within the home. Biologists will never convince the housewife who has done post-Christmas sweeping that evergreens are not deciduous.

Large, natural trees are not adapted to the apartment and small house. In the simple cottage days, where the Christmas tree first appeared, there was no polished furniture to mar nor fine rugs to litter with dry needles. And in the era of large homes with spacious, high-ceilinged rooms it was no problem to transplant an eight-foot spreading conifer in the parlor or living room. An old-fashioned family Christmas tree wouldn't leave enough space in the present-day living room for the tree trimmings.

To meet this problem of the family living in compact quarters the small artificial tree has been evolved and the custom of decorating lawn trees has spread.

A HAPPY CHOICE

From the depths of a thing to the heights is an expression more than figurative in the case of the new Secretary of War, Patrick J. Hurley, whose ascendancy to the distinguished post of cabinet member began at the bottom of an Oklahoma coal mine shaft as a muldriver. He has climbed rapidly, for the age of 46 years finds him entrusted with a mission vital to his country.

While Secretary Hurley's elevation is due, directly, to the death of his former chief, it cannot be said that he owes his present high position to accident. He made himself the logical successor to Secretary Good by his efficient service as assistant secretary of war. He is further qualified by his experience as a lawyer, soldier and business man.

Hurley's appointment gives to the Republican South its long sought place in the president's cabinet, but while some will see in it only this political significance and the payment of a Hoover debt to the erstwhile solid South, it is known that the president was influenced primarily by the obvious qualifications of his choice and the wide experience he will bring to the secretarial post.

It is of some comfort to the chief executive, who, after all, is responsible for the conduct of every department of the federal government, to know that he has in the cabinet men thoroughly conversant with and capable of carrying out his policies.

The football saturnalia is over, and cheer leaders have not even the solace of mention in the Carnegie report.

Health Sketch Given By School Children

ing off colds and care of one's self while suffering with various forms of colds and catarrh, proper food and exercise.

Dr. Ashton was also questioned regarding the status of women in the medical field, and she answered by telling of the place woman holds today in this profession.

The sketch presented by the students of the Bristol High School was well received, and conveyed splendid hints along the line of health. Seated at a table upon the platform were: Miss Doris Johns, who took the part of the mother; Miss Dorothy Desamps, the father; and Miss Helen Nichols, the daughter. The daughter told her parents of her participation in sports at Bristol school, and of her intentions regarding other forms of exercise. Learning that her father and mother were highly in favor of her work along athletic lines, she mentioned the exercises and sports in general which the girls of the high school are active in. The benefits of these games and exercises were brought before the gathering by a number of girls of the school, who appeared in their sport togs and gave demonstrations of work in hockey, basketball, track, dancing, muscular exercises, etc.

The final episode of the little play was the ordering of proper food for her healthy, growing daughter, by the mother.

"In the Garden of Tomorrow" and "Smilin' Through" were two vocal selections given by John Brehm, which highly pleased the members and their guests. Mr. Brehm was accompanied by Mrs. Marburg D. Weagley.

with a smile of proud achievement on his face, he asked, "Have you seen Gail?"

"I'm sorry, old boy—" Mr. Abrams answered sympathetically, as he heard the applause of the audience still reverberating through the theatre. "Get back out there—pass it off as a joke—make them think it was a gag!" And Mr. Abrams pushed Ted back toward the stage.

Reaching the stage, his heart beating hard against the weight of unhappiness that was trying desperately to break into his soul, Ted bowed and feigned a smile to the audience as he said, "I'm sorry, Ladies and Gentlemen, but Miss Wilson has gone home. She didn't expect any such reception as this—because she has heard me play before! And, too, she has a special reason for wanting to get home early tonight. You see, she's very fond of music, and just this afternoon she bought a lot of new Paul Whiteman records."

The audience roared and applauded Ted as he finished it, thinking to be a clever joke, and the curtain rang down on an auditorium full of a happy, laughing, wildly gesticulating audience.

In the box on the right the little old lady slowly got up. Her heart was torn and she was in a quandary. She knew some terrible thing had happened when Gail had taken Lena's place in the specialty number! And she knew only too well her son's strained expression and feigned pleasure as he made the little speech following his act.

The next act had begun as Mrs. Molnar left the box. Her one thought was her boy and to be able to comfort him in his unhappiness, and she made her way to his dressing room. As she entered Mr. Abrams passed her on his way out with a smile of encouragement and she quickly went to her son's side and took him in her arms. Her mother's heart was full, and she crushed him to her, "Ted, I was proud of you. I only wish your father could have been with me and had heard you play!"

"Oh, but, mother, it doesn't mean anything now!" And Ted buried his head in his hands.

She almost sobbed at the anguish of her separation from her husband overwhelmed her. Tighty she held the boy who had cost her so much unhappiness—and had at the same time brought her so much comfort and pleasure. He had tried so hard to make things rosier for her—always lavishing presents and entertainment on her—hoping to help her forget! But when she had smiled at him and pretended she was happy—her heart had been breaking in her breast.

Twenty-five years of companionship! How many times she had reviewed the span of it—and searched honestly and frankly for some place where she may have not come up to the mark—may have failed to "measure up." They were the happy, but lean and hungry years, when Mr. Molnar began his serious career as a violinist, and she could remember the many days of privation and economy in food—and then of a few dollars earned and most of it spent in the delicatessen store for a delicious supper of dil pickles, liverwurst, eye bread and coffee and all the necessary accessories of a real Bohemian meal. How good the food had tasted as they sat and ate and drank from the paper boxes and cartons! She could smell now—the appetizing aroma of thick slices of delicious bacon—sizzling in its own fat, and coffee which has never since tasted so good. And the laughter and joy—the pictures painted with the deft fingers of her imagination—the pangs and the rosy-pink dreams!

Then, along came Ted—much heralded and even before his advent his career mapped out. She had dreamed of his fame—not as a jazz-player but as a violinist to carry on with his father's work. She had instilled him ere he saw the light of day with music—sweet melodious harmony, so that when he arrived and had learned with his tiny fingers to clutch a violin, he took to it as if he were rehearsing a past achievement. Then long days of illness, panic, and the tedious hours of developing the genius present in each tiny hand. And the boy had greedily accepted every suggestion, every hint in his eagerness to bring forth the glorious sounds. Then came the day which ever after stood out, as a bright star stands out in the firmament of stars when the Emperor had presented to the father the valuable rare old instrument. And this was to be Ted's heritage, the goal he must set for himself.

And here he was despondent—exclaiming that it did not mean anything now—after all these years of hope and preparation—it did not mean anything just because a mere whisp of a girl had decided to send him away broken-hearted. And Mrs. Molnar looked into his face earnestly.

Ted stepped from the stage and called, "Gail—oh Gail!" and seeing Mr. Abrams standing in the wings with a smile of proud achievement on his face, he asked, "Have you seen Gail?"

"I'm sorry, old boy—" Mr. Abrams answered sympathetically, as he heard the applause of the audience still reverberating through the theatre. "Get back out there—pass it off as a joke—make them think it was a gag!" And Mr. Abrams pushed Ted back toward the stage.

Reaching the stage, his heart beating hard against the weight of unhappiness that was trying desperately to break into his soul, Ted bowed and feigned a smile to the audience as he said, "I'm sorry, Ladies and Gentlemen, but Miss Wilson has gone home. She didn't expect any such reception as this—because she has heard me play before! And, too, she has a special reason for wanting to get home early tonight. You see, she's very fond of music, and just this afternoon she bought a lot of new Paul Whiteman records."

A new "dame" has them scrapping again! Now you can hear the riot between Flagg and Quirt as they fool, frolic and fume with each other's sweeties from Siberia to the Tropics. "The Cock-Eyed World" broke all records at the Roxy Theatre in New York — the largest theatre in the world — where it ran four weeks, and midnight shows were given to accommodate the crowds.

GYPSIES OPEN CAGE
SEASON WITH VICTORY

By T. M. Juno

Flashing an early season attack the Gypsies opened the A. O. H. Basketball League with a 27-24 victory over the Whoopie five Thursday night.

Exciting moments and spectacular shots kept the spectators in a shouting mood all during the contest.

Captain Gene Lawler of the Gypsies attributed nine points to this team to be high scorer.

"Eddie" Kervick showed up exceptionally well for the losers.

In the second game of the evening, the Fighting Five conquered the newcomers in the league, the Shamrocks, by a 12-7 score.

Close guarding featured this fray although it was noticeable that the boys on both sides had not yet acquired their shooting eyes.

After trailing during most of the game, the Fighting Five sprung a wide attack and were successful in most of their tries at the basket.

Carelessness May Mean Fire

GUARD AGAINST FIRE

Santa Claus isn't always the jolly old spirit of Christmas. When his whiskers catch fire, or when he is careless in the way he wires and decorates the Christmas tree, he is more liable to bring grief than gladness.

Santa has for many years been the patron saint of the year's most joyous season, yet his representatives in homes everywhere have been guilty of so much carelessness and the cause of so much tragedy that we almost need a Society for the Curbings of Kringles.

For a long time we have profited by the fruits of sane Fourths of July. Isn't it about time for more sanity among those who appoint themselves as the envoys of Santa Claus?

In most places served by electricity the official Santa Claus, whether at the domestic tree or the Sunday School celebration, has learned that it is dangerous to wear a fluffy beard in close proximity to flaming candles. Therefore electric bulbs have taken the place of candles, as they should, to a large degree.

But not all homes have electric lights, nor have all communities. In such cases, what is Santa Claus going to do? Shall he go without his white whiskers? Hardly that, for without deception the old fellow is a failure. My advice, and the advice of all who have watched and tried to reduce the number of Christmas tree accidents, is to sacrifice the candles. With all their beauty and sentiment, they are extremely dangerous. Let baubles and non-burning tinsel serve to make the tree gay, and by all means avoid open lights in any form.

As for the Santa Claus who plays his role under modern conditions, where electric lights and power are available, there is still plenty to guard against. Electricity is a hazardous thing unless the equipment is of the accepted standardized variety and the wiring done according to the code approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.
